Editorial

In its 17th year, EJEEP continues to provide a forum for pluralist debates of current topics in economics and economic policies, as well as discussions of eminent publications and authors of the heterodox camp. This issue is no exception to this rule. In the forum section, Emiliano Libman critically appraises the recent textbook Heterodox Macroeconomics: Models of Demand, Distribution and Growth by Robert A. Blecker and Mark Setterfield. The authors of the book respond in the same section, using Libman's comments as a starting point to develop and explain the concept of the book further. The forum section also includes an interview with the well-known pluralist economist Amitava Dutt, who explains why he prefers to call what he is doing political economy or socio-political economy, and not necessarily post-Keynesian economics. The second part of this issue is devoted to the monetary economics of Basil J. Moore, who passed away in 2018. Organised by our guest editor and member of the editorial board, Mark Setterfield, the special issue sheds light on Moore's contributions to monetary economics and its applications to the world of today. As usual, these articles appear now in print but have previously been available online as advance access articles for our subscribers.

After ten years of editorship, Stefan Ederer decided to turn to new challenges and to step back as managing editor of EJEEP. We would like to thank Stefan for his support and his contributions to this journal. We are looking forward to collaborating with him as a member of the editorial board and as a potential guest editor and author.
